When I post something about the usually boring topic of Nike, the reactions are usually along the lines of “meh, it’s just a commercial,” or “I don’t care what Nike makes,” or “maybe they’ll make some quality shoes if they weren’t so greedy”, etc. But a shoe brand that has built a multibillion dollar empire on an international scale doesn’t just ignore that stuff. They’ve been studying everything about us, our culture, and our lives for over a decade now, collecting data from each step of the process, refining their product line, implementing new techniques, and putting us under the microscope to find out how they can continue to make us money. This is why I pay $420 for a pair of Nike socks and don’t balk at paying an extra $50 to $150 for a pair of Reebok, adidas or Puma shoes. I've talked to friends who literally paid over $600 for a pair of Reebok's and I've got some friends who pay upwards of $1000 for Nike shoes. Why? I know a big reason is that Nike has become synonymous with the sport itself, and in a way that's not exclusive to them. I'm sure that had a lot to do with the initial popularity of Nike, and that's
