Category:JewelleryOne of the central nervous system (CNS) demyelinating diseases is multiple sclerosis (MS), which affects young adults and sometimes children. The disorder occurs in approximately 25,000 new cases per year in the United States and an estimated two to three million individuals worldwide. The chronic and unpredictable nature of the disease creates emotional, social and financial burdens for patients and their families. MS usually begins between the ages of 20 and 40 and is characterized by relapsing neurological dysfunction resulting from myelin loss and de-myelinating events, as well as progressive disability and loss of neurological function. Myelin is a fatty substance that protects nerve cells by insulating their cell membranes to increase the efficiency of electrical transmissions along nerves and between nerve cells. Myelin loss may occur via a number of different processes and pathways, e.g., autoimmune damage or metabolic disturbances that result in defects in myelin production or maintenance. In MS, demyelination may occur in all parts of the CNS. Clinically, MS is characterized by episodes of neurological dysfunction lasting from several days to months or even years, and culminating in complete or incomplete paralysis, as well as cognitive decline, mental dysfunction, and visual and other sensory impairment. MS is the most common cause of neurological disability in young adults. Inflammation of the brain and spinal cord caused by degenerating axons leads to a diverse collection of neurological symptoms. The severity of the disease and how quickly it progresses is highly variable from patient to patient. The predominant neurological symptoms of MS are impaired sensation, muscle weakness, tremors, dizziness, visual disturbance, incoordination, bladder and bowel dysfunction, and paresthesia. Less common symptoms include cognitive dysfunction, fatigue, pain, depression, sexual dysfunction, bladder and bowel incontinence, sexual impotence, and erectile dysfunction. Current treatment for MS is primarily palliative, i.e., aimed at maintaining function in the absence of disease-modifying therapy. Current therapies are aimed at dampening the immune response, relieving the symptoms of neurological damage, and preventing new lesions, rather than slowing the progression of the disease. These therapies are not curative, and
